The case for load.jsWhen writing modular and componentized JavaScript to promote maintainability, what before became monolithic JavaScript files are now split into smaller more manageable pieces. This causes more http requests which can impact performance.Having a strategy for script optimization and the intelligent loading of JavaScript files becomes more important.There are many decent script loaders today but no one dominant. And so, load.js was written. It does not implement script loading, only a promise of script loading. See Promises/A. Wrapping a call to an actual script loader in a jQuery Deferred Object.
